

ART APPEALS TO WRESTLING MAN

Binckley Talks Pictures While Woodruff Tells of Friend's Prowess

The artist and the wrestler were talking at the Hotel Tulsa yesterday. The artist talked about wrestling and the wrestler talked about pictures.

Cliff Binckley, challenger for the heavyweight title, sat on the side of the bed and studied the pictures painted by the artist, J. Leonard Woodruff, placed about the room. Binckley didn't have much to say, he said as little when the conversational subject was wrestling as when it was pictures. He has some good pictures in his summer camp at Indian Lake, Ohio. He likes antiques, he is interested in art and he likes to drop around into clubs to hunt out odd bits of things for his "camp." He and Woodruff were hunting through "points" as Woodruff called them, the day before and Binckley bought a cut glass vase, set of rare old dishes and a photograph for his training camp. The bewildered listener, unskilled in the gentle art of wrestling and the habits of the followers of the art, wanted to know what is a training camp, anyway. Binckley's training camp is a seven-room bungalow. The huge young man with the about a like size in pictures illustrating college football stories explained with a twinkle in the quiet gray eyes that he only worked two hours a day, so he had lots of time there to amuse himself with in his spare time.

Woodruff turned his back on his pictures as he discoursed eloquently on Binckley's prowess. He discussed technically and in detail this and that hold, and what Cliff did to this man and what that man said by the time Binckley got through with him. As he talked, the mighty subject of his remarks sat quietly and looked at Woodruff's pictures.

"They are worth the time, those pictures. All of them still life, with fruit and subjects. Peaches with the velvet fuzz and luscious color of real life; grapes that might have just been gathered from the sun-kissed vines and darkly flushed plums."

"Look good enough to eat, don't they?" said Binckley as the group of people rose to go.

"Binckley and 'Stranger' Lewis are going to work on this afternoon at 3 o'clock in the banquet room," said Woodruff. "Better come around."

POLICEMAN KILLS PAIR

Kills City Detective, Takes Bodies to Undertakers and a Surrender.

ANNISTON, Ala., April 26.—Joseph T. Holliday and C. B. Hurst, city detectives, were shot to death in an automobile today by Policeman Marshall Welch, following a dispute.

After killing the officers, Welch secured a driver for the car and took the bodies to an undertaker. He then went to the county jail and surrendered.

Welch is said to have exchanged between Holliday and Welch for several months. Welch claims he shot Holliday in self defense and that Hurst was accidentally killed.

Muratore, Famous Tenor, Near Physical Breakdown

CHICAGO, April 26.—Lucien Muratore, famous tenor of the Chicago Grand Opera company, is on the verge of a physical collapse, it became known today. His condition demands that he quit singing at once and seek quiet, sunshine and fresh air in the country. This information was obtained from his wife, Madame Muratore, the noted beauty.

Congress Will Go Slow Investigating Frauds

WASHINGTON, April 26.—Congress will go slow in investigating alleged frauds in the settlement of war claims, it was clearly indicated this afternoon, following a conference between Chairman Campbell of the House rules committee, Secretary Weeks and Attorney-General Daugherty and Representative Woodruff of Michigan and Johnson of South Dakota, who had demanded such an inquiry.

Good Road Work in Oklahoma. Special to The World.

OKLAHOMA, April 26.—The preliminary work on the system of hard-surface roads to be built in Oklahoma county is going on, surveyors being busy on the route from Okemah to the Oklahoma county line through Pharoah and the Deader oil pool. It is expected that the federal aid money and the money realized from the sale of the road bonds will be available for construction work to begin by July 1.

Road Enthusiast for Senate. Special to The World.

ATOKA, April 26.—William Gill of Atoka has announced that he will be a candidate for state senate from Atoka, Coal and Bryan counties on the democratic ticket. Mr. Gill was a member of the 1919 legislature and is a good road enthusiast. He is at present secretary of the Stratford-Atoka-Texas division of the Ozark Trail association.

SHELTON GOES TO TRIAL ON JUNE 4

Will Take Practically as Much Time as the Previous Case

That Frank Shelton, third member of the alleged Harry Aurandt murder trio, and the one member of the band that was not convicted by the jury of Pawnee county farmers, will probably go to trial June 4, was the announcement made by the county attorney Wednesday. That date, according to John M. Goldenberry, prosecutor, has been tentatively chosen as the date to start the trial and unless some unforeseen developments occur the alleged murderer will again go on trial on that date.

The first trial was concluded last Friday when the jury sent Tom W. Cook and Alvin Fears to the state penitentiary for the remainder of their lives, but failed to agree as to the guilt or innocence of Shelton. The former trial was nearly two weeks in being heard and while there will be only one man on trial at the second hearing it is expected to take almost as long. That it will take longer to get a jury is the belief of the county attorney and it will take just as long to present the state's side of the case as it did at the former hearing, probably longer.

MAKE GOOD WAFFLES

Lots of housewives think the making of waffles is very difficult.

The secret is in buying a cooking fat that will stand a high degree of heat. When the fat used to grease the waffle irons burn, then the batter is bound to burn, while it retains its body, then your waffles are safe.

Try Mrs. Tucker's Shortening for waffles. You'll be delighted with the way it stands high heat—and how delicious your waffles come off the fire.

Constable Waives His Preliminary Hearing

E. R. Goode, constable and election official, waived preliminary hearing Wednesday on a charge of attempting to stuff the ballot boxes in the democratic primary held this spring. Goode was held for trial in district court under a $2,500 bond. Goode was jointly charged with several other election officials and candidates with conspiracy to steal the democratic primary. Others accused are H. W. Goode, election official; William Hastings and C. M. Downing, defeated candidates for city commissioner; Jack Hodkins, Joe Hastings, T. H. Costello and E. E. Friend. Joe Hastings and Costello have never been arrested. Hodkins' case is still in justice court. His preliminary will be completed Friday. All of the other men waived preliminary hearings.

Chicago Woman Believed to Have Been Ashamed of Disgrace.

CHICAGO, April 26.—Fear of bringing disgrace upon her family through divorce court revelations of her domestic unhappiness is believed today to have been the motive that led Mrs. Wright A. Cornell, 20, to end her life by shooting herself. The shooting took place at the fashionable North Shore hotel in Evanston while 200 women were enjoying a card party a few floors below.

Mrs. Cornell was the wife of Lieut. Wright A. Cornell, a former army officer who lives in Detroit. She had been estranged from her husband and had filed suit for divorce in Detroit.

HELEN HUNTER'S HUSBAND

By Jane Phelps

CHAPTER XVI

Helen Plans to Entertain The Bridge Club.

When Jack gave Helen money he never questioned her as to the cost of things, yet after they were dressed for the party he couldn't help but wonder if she would have enough left to keep going until he took in more. Her dress bore all the earmarks of a fashionable modiste, her thin silk stockings and satin slippers all looked expensive. But she was so gleeful, so happy that they both looked well, he said nothing, but he mentally made up his mind to work very hard at his embroidery so that she could have the pretty clothes and other things she craved.

"She's just a child in her love of beautiful clothes," he said to himself, as he told her how lovely she looked when she pinched before him.

Arrived at the party Jack had to acknowledge that he would have felt very uncomfortable had he worn his old suit. The men were all well dressed, the women, daintily so. Helen was in her element, and fairly scintillated.

"You have a very charming wife, Hunter," Mr. Layton said, "her enthusiasm is delightful."

Jack smiled with pride. Helen was charming. He was a very fortunate man in that she belonged to him—loved him. That she was extremely popular he saw at once. Not only with the men, but with the women, most of them members of the bridge club.

"That wife of yours takes all our money," Mr. Layton said in good spirits. "I'll bet you'll be a millionaire by now."

"I've never seen anyone play cards with such luck as she has," Henry—Mr. Moore—didn't believe in playing for money, and he would me furiously about his innocent little club, don't you, Henry?" she appealed to her husband who joined them.

"It's a bad business, Hunter. Women are too emotional to gamble. They take both their winnings and their losses too much to heart. I tell you she is developing a bad case of nerves since she began to play."

"I agree with you, Mr. Moore, although I don't suppose I am fact-ful to say so before Mrs. Moore."

"Nonsense! You are only jealous because we don't ask you to join our club. But men are barred," Dell rejoined laughing.

Jack wondered if all women were as carefully set upon having their own way as were Helen, and Dell Moore, but he joined in the laugh, and gave a light answer.

They dined, played cards, and had a delicious supper. To his amazement and dismay just as the party broke up Helen said:

"A week from tonight you are all invited to come to us. You see how economical I am. Saving telephone calls or postage, by asking you now."

A chorus of acceptance greeted her, while Jack stood by her side smiling, his heart chilled. Eight couples, and they were in debt now. Why couldn't Helen have waited a little longer? Waited until he had paid for the suit she had insisted upon his buying, and her own clothes which he can't judge she had not entirely paid for with what he had given her. But even so, he couldn't help a feeling of pride in her glowing beauty, her popularity.

"Want it a nice party, Jack?" Helen asked when they reached their own apartment.

"Very." But Helen, you should have talked it over with me before you asked them. Such entertaining is expensive, and—

"Aren't you making good money now?" Helen's voice was cold, icy. "I did this month, but I have no money for the future. Not until I am more of a financial success, more."

"That wife of yours takes all our money," Mr. Layton said in good spirits. "I'll bet you'll be a millionaire by now."

"I've never seen anyone play cards with such luck as she has," Henry—Mr. Moore—didn't believe in playing for money, and he would me furiously about his innocent little club, don't you, Henry?" she appealed to her husband who joined them.

sure of an income can we afford to entertain on such a large scale. Eight couples beside ourselves, 18 people. It costs a lot even to give them a simple supper.

"So you begrudge me doing my part in entertaining my friends?" Her voice oozed with tears.

"No dear—not when we can afford it. But at present we must go slow. Did you pay for the new things you bought?"

"All but my dress."

"How much was that?"

"Only $100. It was reduced, and isn't it a dream?" She glanced in the mirror, a satisfied expression on her face.

Jack was too stunned to reply. His mother never had paid anything like such a sum for a dress in her life. He must impress upon Helen that it could not—would not—endure such extravagance.
